Sir,

The National Security Guard, a Federal Contingency Force, was raised in 1984 for combating terrorist activities with a view to protecting States against internal disturbances and for matters connected therewith.

2. Over a period of time a need was felt to establish Museum to provide comprehensive awareness to the future generation about the service and sacrifices of the Commandos of NSG in safeguarding the nation from terrorist acts. # SPATIAL LAYOUT OF THE MUSEUM

EXISTING MUSEUM DISPLAY

The driving spirit of the NSG begins with the entrance gate and the railings all around the museum. The fine blend of tradition and modernity is witnessed in the artistic arrangement of a bow and arrow in a shooting position on the gate. Symbolizing alertness, single arrow facing the sky depicts one goal, concentration and growth. Completing the picture are two life size black Commandos standing guard on either side of the gate. The gate opens to usher into a world of action.

The space in front of the Museum's main door has been transformed into a Park. The showpiece in the centre of the lush green park is the sculptural fountain depicting the hierarchy of the NSG. A central pillar made of black marble holds up NSG symbol "Sudershan Chakra". The centre pillar symbolizes the NSG headquarters while the water flowing out continuously from the left and right sides of the pillar stands for the force HQ and the training centre. The never stopping flow of water depicts the continuous activity and the never ending practice that the two groups are engaged in.

Surrounding of the fountain, there are the figures of animals and birds amidst the flowering trees depicting the natural surrounding. The fighting bulls symbolize force, the dancing peacock provides a sense of rhythm and the standing deer alertness, all characteristics so typically of NSG. The same characteristic theme is displayed on the façade of the Museum where black stylized figures of NSG commandos can be seen in various training models.

Right at the entry from the main door is the eye catching mural with stained glass effect, titled, 'The Seven Horses' which stands for the Sun, the God of Power, Strength and life. Controlled by the NSG emblem on top, the seven horses in seven colours of life are seen jumping across a hurdles in all directions. The message comes across strong and clear : No obstacle is impossible to cross if God's hand provides shelter and guidance.

Around the corridor walls of the Museum, there are over 20 metal sculptures emphasizing power, strength and determination. Starting with the birth of the cosmos, the beginning of all life, the sculptures make their way through time to mark the stone, copper and iron ages when man made his first weapon to initially survive and later used in his struggle for power. The sculptures move on to the Islamic and the Colonial eras when technology stepped in to become a byword in security. The sculptures depict the unique blend of man and machine with total control over the ultimate weapon of defense.

The two cement murals on the left and the right corners of the building, taken from the Mahabharata, one showing Dronacharya training Arjun to concentrate and shoot, the other depicting Arjun, now having achieved ultimate perfection, targeting the eye of the fish aptly symbolizes the transformation of a probationer into a marksman. The realistically crafted murals with the bronze effect brings us back to life and truth. The open space in the centre of the Museum has been symbolically crafted to display the comprehensive security provided by the NSG to VIPs.

The NSG Museum proudly preserves the operational history and heritage of the long years of its progress. The vast variety of armaments gadgets, equipments and apparels all stand displayed in silent testimony of the challenges of the time by gone. The displays of the Museum are housed in four rooms and the each room has visual displays, models and equipments recording the history of the force, the men behind it and it heroes. The weapon & equipments to fulfill the Counter Terrorism, Counter Hijacking and VIP Security tasks are displayed.
